Yuka Yamaguchi was born in Kobe, Japan. She moved to Canada in 2000, and is now currently living in Saskatoon. She is a self-taught artist who draws with colour pencils and makes useless toys for adult-children. Her drawings have been exhibited internationally from Tokyo, LA, NYC to Berlin.

"I always find my body parts to be superficial. My eyes are so selfish that they only see the things they want to see. My mouth chooses to say what you want to hear. My brain only remembers good scenes from my life. Soon, my hands and legs will give up on me and they will detach themselves and fly away to become separate creatures. My skin is only to cover up all the things that make myself. I wish I could rip my skin apart to see what's inside of me."
